Putting Dental Implants in place requires a procedure called alveolar ridge preservation, in which we do facial sculpting and replace the missing bone and soft tissue with GBR (graft bone replacement). Dr. Huang begins the surgery with a local anesthetic, usually under a very thin layer of anesthesia. After the anesthesia is put in place, we cut a flap and create a pocket to place the graft. This type of surgery takes approximately two hours to perform, with the actual grafting taking another 20 to 30 minutes. We need to give time for the bone to take before moving forward with the rest of the surgery. The rest of the procedure usually takes between three and four hours and includes removing the implant, preparing it for its permanent position in the patient's mouth, and placing it in its final position. The placement of the dental implants requires a particular kind of small drill bit, with a long guidewire, which is placed through the gum into the jawbone, allowing us to place the implant in the right position, at the right height, and at the correct angle. We will also place dental prosthetics to make sure the implant is fully integrated with the tissue and looks "natural." This type of implant surgery is a delicate surgery that requires great attention to detail. Once the patient is safely and comfortably in her recovery room, she will begin to heal. Our test results are given as a time scale in months. In our opinion, GBR is a tried and true procedure, which is safe and effective. It is our goal to offer every patient the best dental implant solution to help them achieve that beautiful, healthy smile they have always wanted. In order for Dr. Huang to determine how well your gums will heal from the procedure, you will need to have a few appointments where the gums will be examined f678ea9f9e
