HIV seroprevalence among street homeless men: a comparison of HIV testing rates in men enrolled in substance abuse treatment centers and in men in the general population. The purpose of the present study was to compare the HIV prevalence rates among street homeless men enrolled in substance abuse treatment programs with those in the general population of men. Unlinked HIV antibody testing was done on a systematic, random basis in both groups at the time of substance abuse treatment enrollment. A total of 895 men were enrolled in substance abuse treatment programs and screened for HIV: 521 were randomly selected from across the state and 374 were identified from a network of homeless shelters. The overall HIV prevalence rate in the men enrolled in substance abuse treatment programs was 6.1%. The corresponding rate for the men in the network of homeless shelters was 30.3%. In the homeless shelter network, the HIV prevalence among African-Americans was 54.1%, and among Caucasians was 20.0%. In addition, among the men in the substance abuse treatment programs, the HIV prevalence rate was higher among men with a history of intravenous drug use (13.5%) than men without such a history (4.8%). The most common reason for not accepting a HIV test was a refusal to provide a blood sample, accounting for about 45% of homeless shelters. Among men in substance abuse treatment programs, the most common reason for refusal to provide a blood sample was fear of being tested and thoe diagnosed, accounting for half of all refusals. In conclusion, the HIV prevalence rate among homeless street men enrolled in substance abuse treatment programs is more than 30 times higher than among men in the general population. These data suggest that HIV testing, are needed to identify and link them to needed medical and social services.
